Aaron Feustel, Ward 1 read from his handout he gave to Council:

Council Meeting
February 8, 2023
Page 40

When the Director of Parks and Rec approached me wondering about the possibility that I might have put some soil and concrete on city park land, I could have pointed to my 2 year old permit and said I had permission, end of story. But I didn't.

When the City Council complained that I was "encroaching" on the rail trail property, I could have pointed to the meeting minutes of the Parks and Rec Board, where they specifically said it was not an encroachment, and then rejected all further arguments to remove it. But I didn't.

I could have just sat back and let the city bumble their way through when the Planning and Development department couldn't figure out where my house was on their plan view of the rail trail property, or even where the rail trail was. Instead I got a survey of my property at my own expense to help move things along.

At the second council meeting, when the city refused to give me the year I thought that I needed to remove the material, I could have thrown a fit and refused to do anything. But I didn't. In fact, I'd already gotten to work getting access across my property to the material the city wanted removed.

When the city pointed out that I could just use the rail trail to remove the material, and that I should just hire contractors to do it, I pointed out that driving heavy equipment over the trail would likely rut it out. When the city ignored me, I proceeded to do it by hand.

When the city refused to provide a written scope of work, defining what the completed project would look like in case I wanted to hire a contractor, I could have thrown a fit. Instead I just kept working.

Later in the project, the city tried to get me to sign a document which might have been considered the scope of work I'd requested months earlier. It had several incorrect statements, added a new demand that I not damage any wetlands, and would have extended my "deadline" by a couple weeks. I could have signed the document, then demanded the city locate and mark all such wetlands before I continued work. But I didn't.

Mid way through the project, I found that the roots of a city owned tree just on the other side of my property line were in the way, and working around it would add 2-4 weeks of work for me. I'd determined that I'd probably be done mid to late November without this delay, but the additional 2-4 weeks would require a pause for winter. Instead of just hacking through the roots to get the job done and risking the tree coming down, I asked to remove the tree. When the city said no, I made three different cases for its being in the city's best interest in the short, medium, and long term to remove the tree. When the city still declined, I offered to take it down myself. When the city still declined, I even offered to replace the tree with a nice flowering tree that would look pretty in the spring. When the city still declined, I came before this council to request permission to take the tree down. When the council made it clear it had no interest in considering my request, I finished what I could without risk of freeze-thaw causing a hazard, and then paused for winter in hopes the city would change its mind.

When the city decided it was in a hurry and was going to complete the work in November, regardless of what I did, I was quite clear that I would not pay more than a proportional cost of the initial estimate to remove the material. I also offered a location which would accept the material for free, but the city declined.

After the city completed the work, I noticed they'd left 5-10 yards of material to reinforce the embankment. I could have thrown a fit, since this would still be considered an "encroachment" on the rail trail property, which was the justification for having me remove all the material. But I let it go.

When the city sent me a bill for 150% of the initial estimate (nearly $600), I offered to pay $250 if the city provided acknowledgement that the work was complete. $250 would have been my costs: $200 in gas and -$50 in vehicle maintenance to remove the remaining material. The city has not acknowledged my offer, and has threatened me with legal action, with a deadline of February 15th. When evaluating whether you want to accept my offer or pursue legal action, I hope you will consider the following:

1) The city council didn't vote to give me access to the rail trail, they voted to tell parks and rec to give me access. This vote took place on June 22, and I was to have 90 days of access. 90 days from June 22 is September 20th. I was first granted written permission to use the rail trail on October 13th. From the time it was proposed, I'd stated that using heavy equipment on the rail trail would damage the trail. This permission did not include any language for the city to assume responsibility for any such damage, and I've not received any such written permission since. In the process of removing some of the material, the city proved me correct by rutting out the trail for a large amount of what they drove over.

2) Before the city started work, I pulled 95 loads of dirt and debris by hand over my property. The first 2-3 loads were 33x 5 gallon buckets, while the remaining loads were 34x buckets. Thus, each load was approximately 5/6ths of a yard of material or more, weighing about a ton per load, or about 95 tons total. 23 loads were from my property to gain access to the top of the terrace of material, and the remaining 72 loads were from the terrace itself, which required carrying them up 12-17 ft of elevation, or up between 1.5-2 flights of stairs. That equates to about 3,230x 5 gallon buckets, about 780 from my property and about 2,450 from city property. Or, about 20 yards from my property and 60 yards from city property. I originally estimated that there were 112.5 yards of material on city property, and later reduced that estimate to about 100 yards. Thus, I had about 40 yards to go when I paused work near the end of October. Each load took 2.5-3.5 hours, for a total of -300 hours of labor over 4 month or the approximately 20 hours per week, not counting interacting with city representatives.

Rebecca Mackenzie, Ward 2, noted the Cultural Center off of Elm Street is having their ninth annual Koasek Snow Snake games held at Village Green in Alstead at 10AM on February 11th.

Norm Blouin, Ward 1, shared concern for the Planning and Development, and the Parks and Recreation Department.

Executive Council, Cinde Warmington, Executive Councilor for District 2. This is Ms. Warmington's second term, but first term representing Claremont after last year's re-districting. Executive Council Warmington noted focusing on broadband and community housing grants, and is looking forward to working with Claremont.

Rob Walker, Ward 1, mentioned Arrowhead is open this weekend, there will be a Pigskin 5K, tubing, and next weekend there is a cardboard sled race. Mr. Walker noted these are great opportunities to be outside.

Assistant Mayor Matteau had Clerk to the City Council read the 2nd motion from the February 1st Council Meeting.

“a motion was made by Councilor Koloski and seconded by Councilor O'Hearne to remove sitting councilor Jim Contois for dereliction of duty for the failure to inform the Council of relative information he possessed while having a Council level discussion.”

Assistant Mayor Matteau noted the same eight Councilors who initially voted on this motion will vote again.

Assistant Mayor Matteau explained the reasoning for putting this motion back on the table was because at the end of the last meeting when Councilor Limoges asked Councilor Contois what his reasoning was for not sharing accurate information with the Council about the vote from the HDC. Assistant Mayor Matteau stated Councilor Contois' response was - Mostly I don't trust a lot of you guys. Matteau explained she feels this was not an honest mistake, instead it was deliberate by this statement of not trusting the Council.
